Crete specu peperisset (si autem lucem aspicere non auderet) ad interos defluxit, ibique infernalis fluvius amantissimus, qui primis excipit mortuorum animas effectus est, alij Tantis & Terræ fluvium faciunt, & ob id à Iove ad inferos dejectum ferunt quod in fluminibus Titanis Lympeidæ perstitit aquas. *A. he on autem dicitur quasi gaudium carens, That is, warning joy and comfort: a river so called that is said to receive the souls of the deceased, because that when men are ready to die, a certain (addidit allusionem) est se subvertit the mind and understanding, that death may easily be discerned to be as hard, for then the conscience and memory of things that be done trouble the mind, which mere Luke, or Mirth must first be passed over, nor can the mind choose but be miserably perplexed in the searching and examining of their life formerly spent, this river is said to be the source of Ceres, or the earth, because the whole trouble and vexation of the mind arises in the care of getting and keeping of riches. This river gave drink to the Titans fighting against Iove, because many wicked cogitations and thoughts do arise up against the commendments of God, which if the mind shall cherish and use was unto, but must needs rebel against the Law of God, and become in nature a beast, besides it is said to be of a most bitter taste, because that then the course of our former life being called to account must needs breed bitterness and grief, vide Nat. Ceres was knowing, who missing her daughter, lighting torches on Mount Aetna (which hath burned ever since) sought her all the world over. And in her travell came to king Eleusius, and obtained the education of his sonne Triptolemus: in the day time she gave him milk of heaven, and in the night raked him in the fire: when he was grown to age, she provided him a chariot drawn with winged dragons, that he might travell all through the world and teach them how to sow corn. Afterwards hearing that her daughter Proserpina was with Pluto, she went to Jupiter, and complained of the injury done her about her daughter: Jupiter granted that her daughter should returne forth of hell upon condition, if she had tasted nothing in hell whilst she was there: but being proved by the witnesse of Alcaphus, that she had eaten some of a Pomegranate as she walked in the orchard of Pluto, she was then denied all hope of returne, and Alcaphus for his talestelling was turned into an owle. Delli. Certaine narrow lakes or ponds nere to Darana, of a wonderfull depth, which the inhabitants call Gobbets or Chalices. The Poets saie that these were Pallis's fountains of Jupiter and Thalia; for Thalia receiving her self to bee with child by Jupiter, fearing Iuno's ire, wished that the earth would open and swallow her up, and at the time of her delivery of child, the earth opened in these places, where these ponds are called Delli, and two children were sent to appear up in the water, whom they called, Palicos fratres, deo tu mædæu mædæu, quod prius in terram demerit, denud reuerſi sunt. Those pools the inhabitants hold sacred to the brethren Palicos, and these pools were in such veneration, that in doubtful and great matters they would bring men thither to take their oaths.

the Grecians did resort for counsel in matters of any great importance, where the demoi gave answers by women which were served for that purpose, by whom the answer was so subtly and darkly delivered, that whosoever the counsel should be, a favourable interpretation would make it true, as may be seen in that one amphibologia or doubtful proposition; Ibis, redibis, nunquam per bella peribis: the counsel falling contrary to expectation made another sense of the words thus. Ibis, redibis nunquam, per bella peribis. Such like were all Apollon's counsels, no prophesies, but delusions. long. 49. lac. 37.

Deucalion. The sonne of Prometheus who married Pyrrha daughter to Epimetheus whom hee raigned in Thessaly, came the vniuersall flood, and drowned all the world, onely hee and his wife Pyrrha got into a ship, and it was carried into the mount Parnassus, and there stayed nigh the dry land first appeared: when the flood was done, hee consulted with the Oracle of Themis, how many of

might be repaired, and he was answered, that if hee cast his great mothers bones behind his backe: hee took stones, the bones of his mother the earth, and cast ouer his shoulders, and they became men, and his wife cast stones ouer her shoulders backward and they became women, whence they say came the Græcians, of Γῆς lapis. This deluge came onely in Greece and Italy: but by the cunning of Sathan, what was spoken of in Scripture the Poets spoke of as a fable, that we might give little credit to Scripture, when wee see it made but a poeticall fiction, they fauoured all things, to haue happened after Deucalions flood, as they did after the generall inundation in the days of Noah: that Deucalion did restore mankind, what our Poets deeme the strabus, hee did only cause them to come to the top of Parnassus, being there safe about the waters, where after the flood he taught them more civility than they had. of two Tyrants of Sicily, the last of which two ruled with such tyranny, that all his people were in his rage. Once one old woman prayed for his life: he hearing it, asked her why she prayed for his life: quoth she, I can remember one cruel tyrant, and two old men be winking his death, these came another, and he was so soft, he decaunted that woman at the gutter, and if that were mine, I fear you should have a better chance. He that said he would be a Tyrant, he was a Tyrant, he went to Constantinople, where he had a thousand companies of life, whom he made his slaves. Dying for cash, he set to sell his slaves, and as he sold one of his greatest houses to the Countess of the people, he left at his sale, a new found money, for as when he sold at our rule, he sold at his own.

Epaminondas, *A noble man of Thebes, one of Polymnus, and a valiant warrior, a man of singular knowledge in the philosophy which Pythagoras taught, for the practice of all moral virtues, he was admired of all men in his time, and admired by none; it was observed in him that he would never live, neither in idleness, nor in earnest for his own gain. He overcame the Athenians, and the Lacedæmonians, and made Thebes during his time the Empires and chief city of Greece, which was both before him and after his rebellion to other people. So brave was the power of one noble man's dol prince, exceed the power of a whole commonwealth. At last the battle at Mantinea, between the Thebans and the Lacedæmonians he was wounded to death with a long spear, the head remaining still in his body, so his life continued until he heard that his army had the victory, then he commencing the top of a spear to be pulled out, said that hee had lived long enough, now he die tranquilly, and so with great joy of his victory, his blood and flesh issued out of the same wound together. He, yea, ἡδύση, i. the wife of Orpheus, who flying from Arithmē, that would have ravish'd her, was slain with a serpent; Orpheus took his corpse, and went to hell for her, and with his musick perswaded Pluto and Proserpina, to let him have his wife with him: which they granted upon condition, he should not look on her, till they saw the light; but he failed, & so lost her. This fable is thus moraliz'd: Eurydice signifies the soul of man, Orpheus the body, whereunto the soul is married; ἡδύση, to ἡδύς or ἡδύς, i. that happiness, which would gladly ravish the soul; but the flying through grass and fragrant fields of pleasure and delights, is as lengthning to death by a serpent, which is just the event of immoderate pleasure; she descends to hell, in tokening melancholic dampens and tortures of conscience, where she is rescued by musick; but, if that woman she obey the rule of reason, she shall quickly fall into the same perplexed way: vid. *Nar. Hercules, de huius nominis Etym. optime poetæ. ἡρακλῆς δὲ ἐκ τοῦ ἡρᾶ ἡρωῖς καὶ κλέος, Æg. ἡρᾶ ἀνδρῶν καὶ κλέος κλέος ἀνδρῶν. The sense of Jupiter and Aliment: Græc. ἡρακλῆς: quidam πᾶσι τὸ ἐκ τῷ κλέος τὸ κλέος ἡρακλῆς, quod a Iunone gloriam accipias sit, vel πᾶσι τὸ κλέος ἡρακλῆς ἀπὸ τῆς ἡρᾶς, nam apud Iunonem ubique laude erat: vel πᾶσι τῷ κλέος, quia in terra erat gloriosus. Plura vide apud Etymol. Cicero lib. 3. de nat. Deorum. 6. memorat hoc nomen fuisse appellatos: Vario 44. Veruntamen omnes qui robore præstiterunt, ab Hercule Louis & Alimentis filio (qui & Alides voc.) appellatos fuisse testatur. Macrobius lib. 1. asserit Herculem esse Solem (vix nomine satis claret ἡρακλῆς: est ἡρακλῆς i. æcis gloria, quæ nil aliud est nisi Solis illuminatio) 12 vero labores quos Hercules confectisse creditur, sunt 12 signa Zodiaci, quæ Sol singulis annis conficit. Hinc Herculi Alimentis filio (quem maxime nobilitavit, implacabile Iunonis odium) aliorum omnium, quotquot præcellerunt, labores tribuuntur, quorum 24 enumerat Calp. breuius ergo 12 tantum insignes commemorabo, omnibus cæteris omissis. 1 He slew a Lion in the wood Nemæa. 2 He slew the monster Hydra, in the fennes of Letna. 3 He slew the wild boar of Erymanthus, which wasted Arcadia. 4 He slew the Centaurs. 5 He took a siege running on foot. 6 He slew 2 birds Symphylides, which ate up the fruits. 7 He cleansed Augias's stable. vi. Augæa. 8 He brought a bull from Cree, into Greece, drawing him along the sea. 9 He took Diomedes king of Thrace, and giving him to be eaten of his own man-eating horse, and afterwards breaking those wild horses, brought them to Eurythæus. 10 He took Geryon, and his cattle into his own house. 11 He went to hell, and brought thence with him Theseus and Prochus, bringing away the dog Cerberus. 12 He took the golden apples out of the garden of Hesperides, and killed the dragon that kept them from him. Hence arise these proverb, Herculei lab. res, signifying a work impossible to be achieved. Herculis Coluthus, signifying many words used to the expressing of some light matter. Frustra Herculi, signifying how vain it is to dispraise those whom their works commend, it is occasioned by Iuno, which added more to Hercules his praise by seeking to defame him. Herculis & Simla, a promise offered to expresse an odious and uselessly comparison. Hercules hospitatur, when one is long a doing of a thing, as he is said to be long at a feast before he could be full. Soldas interpretatur Hercules huiusmodi he Philop. 3, by which he slew the dragon: i. naturalis continentie et heri force milis or fures: viz. arger, reuocatus, et plesine. Livy for his death, v. Pertinax a mor. ann. mun. 2732. ante Christ. 1196. Calist.

Phæton, gr. φαῖτων, i. lucidus, dict. ἀρ, ἢ ἀρσ, à luce & ἀρσ, vro. The sonne of Sol and Clymene: he requested of his father Phæbus the guiding of the chariot of the sunne for one day, Phæbus granted him his demand, but withall told him the danger that would ensue such an attempt: Phæton being careless of any future events, made use of his fathers grant, where first being unable to performe that office, hee let the reins goe, and had like to have set the world on fire; he scorched Ethiopia, &c. At length Iupiter being afraid lest hee also should be burnt, strooke him with a shewderbolt, and hee fell into the river Eridanus or Padus, now called Po. At his coming into Italy (anno mund. 2107. vt Fund.) there was much ground in Italy burnt in three places by fire, which gave occasion to this fable related of him: 14. yeeres after, which was about Abrahams death, hee went backe againe into Ethiopia, and there ended his daies. He was supposed to be that the third sonne of Cham, mentioned Gen. 10. Caluissius out of Euseb. saith that he was an Astronomer, who foretold all these great burnings in Italie and Ethiopia, which came to passe anno. mund. 2429. and the same combustion is mentioned by Aristotle in his booke de mundo: and so by Lucian, hee is called the sonne of Sol, or the sunne, because by his Astronomy, hee first observed the course of the sunne, whereby to gather such predictions from it. Howsoever it be, the fable doth profess unto vs the picture of an inconsiderate and ambitious Prince, who being touched with an eager desire of Mastery, before his time ascends the Throne, but shortly after leaving losse the reins by his unadvised government, hee sets his subjects all in a combustion, and reduces his owne downefall, inde Phætoniades.

Creon king of Thebes made a Proclamation over all Greece, that if any man could expound his riddle, hee should have his sister Iocasta to his wife; Oedipus undertooke it, and said it was a Man, who in his infancy went on all fette, (id est,) by hands and fette: in his middle age on two legges, and when hee is old on three, that is, hee used a staff: as which expofition Sphinx was so grieved, that hee threw himselfe downe the rocke and brake his necke. So the fable: the truth is, hee was a robber, whose cruelty was signified by these parts of wild beasts which hee was fained to have, and his riddles were straits into which hee drew men, and there killed them, if by their strength they could not free themselves, as Oedipus did, slaying him; for which cause the Thebanes made Oedipus king, perceiving that hee was a potent man: Nat.
